How Payments Work

JEVORAH | Policy information | 19 November 2026

Planned payment process

The client and worker agree on the task, price, and timing before work starts. After the task is completed and confirmed, the client pays the worker directly using UPI details shared for that payment.

What JEVORAH does

JEVORAH helps people find work, communicate, and track task progress. The planned payment process does not place money in a JEVORAH wallet. JEVORAH does not collect, hold, or transfer task payments.

Payment confirmation

The person sending the money should check the recipient details before authorising the UPI transfer. Both parties should keep the UPI transaction reference or receipt and confirm payment with each other. A task marked completed in JEVORAH is not itself proof that money was transferred.

Disputes and refunds

If payment or task completion is disputed, contact JEVORAH support with the task details and available evidence. Refund requests are reviewed under the Refund and Cancellation Policy.

Current status

This document describes JEVORAH’s planned direct UPI workflow. It does not mean that a transfer is initiated automatically by the website.
